SERIOUS RIOT.

MEMPHIS, TENN., FRIDAY, JUNE 2, 1882.

The Joliet steel and ironworks had a gang of about twenty non-union men, some of them colored, unloading iron at one of its docks in this city. At the close of the work this evening they got on board the Chicago and Alton train to go to Joliet. When the train stopped at the Panhandle crossing, five or six miles out, a gang of about fifty striking ironworkers and their friends, mostly young fellows, sur-rounded the train. Four or five jumped upon the engine, and presenting their revolvers at the heads of the engineer and fireman, pre-vented them from starting the train again. In the meantime another detachment entered the train and pulled out all the work-men they could recognize, including half-a-dozen colored men and one white man. The dozen colored men and one white man. The remainder of the crowd outside took them, beat, kicked and stamped on them, injuring them severely. Many stones were thrown in the melee, and twenty-five or thirty-shois were fired. One of them took effect in the groin of Judge Pillsbury, of the Illinois Appellate Court, inflicting a wound which it is feared will prove fatal. The rioters after beating the perges to their hearts content beating the negroes to their hearts content dispersed, emptying the chambers of their revolvers. No arrests. Judge Pillsbury was brought back to the city, and the wounded workmen were taken on to Joliet.
